Update on Coronavirus Market Impacts

The demand side of the housing market in California remains robust. Buyers are hungry for a home that suits their new needs. Workers have greater flexibility to take advantage of that preference with increased work from home. However, a lack of supply is also putting upward pressure on home prices and crimping the ability of pending and closed transactions to grow as much as they should. Read full report

C.A.R. Asks for Additional COVID Relief

Last week, C.A.R. sent a letter to the California Congressional Delegation to urge Congress to take action by passing another COVID-19 relief package. Among other items in the letter, C.A.R. asked that the next relief package provide funding for a rental assistance program and a homeowner assistance program. The moratoriums on evictions and foreclosures has helped bring stability to housing by protecting those financially impacted by the COVID crisis.
